Administration of Primary Health Centres in India

By S.P. Ranga Rao

Mittal Publications, New Delhi, 1993. N.A. Book Condition: New. Viii+186pp As A Signatory To The Aima Ata Declaration India Is Committed To -Provide Health For All By 2000 A.D.?

Accordingly Since 1985 A Large Number Of Additional Rural Health Institutions Have Come Into Existence In Various States. By 1992, 20, 847 Primary Health Centres, 1,30,782 Subcentres And 2060 Community Health Centres Have Come To Be Established In Rural India. However The Resources Provided For The Centres Both Human And Material Are Grossly Inadequate For Them To Provide Even A Fraction Of The Service Needed. Doctors Are Reluctant To Work In Rural Areas. Drugs Are In Short Supply And Often Not Of Good Quality. Equipment Is Not Properly Maintained. There Is Undue Stress On The Curative Aspect To The Neglect Of The Preventive And Primitive Aspects Of Health. Indian Medicine Does Not Receive The Importance It Deserves As Compared To The Allopathic System. There Is Preference To Costly Allopathic Drugs And Simple Household Remedies Are Neglected. There Is A Strong Case For Vigorous Research In Ethnopharmacology To Discover The Scientific Basis For Traditional Drugs. People's Participation In Rural Health Programmes Is Marginal. Rural Local Bodies Are Not Actively Associated With Management...
