The meeting was opened with instructive remarks by the Chairman relative to the increase in the number of double stars that have been discovered, giving credit to many and notable discoveries at the Lick Observatory; justifying very amply the generous appropriations made for the maintenance of that noble institution. Mr. Knight then gave a resume of the knowledge now systematized relative to Phoebe, the ninth satellite of Saturn; claiming for it a diameter of about a thousand miles, a radius of revolution of about two million miles, and a period of perhaps three weeks. It is claimed by some that this planet moves about its principal in a direction reverse to that of the other satellites, but this theory is not fully accepted by the astronomical world. The question gave rise to a spirited discussion. The Chairman then introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. B. R. Baumgardt, who entertained the section first by reference to...
