This written book is great. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. You will not really feel monotony at at any moment of your time (that's what catalogues are for about when you check with me).

Again, where  $d$  is large compared to  $r$ ,  $d-r$  may be considered as equivalent to  $d$ . Hence, we may for ordinary aerial lines, use  $C =$  electrostatic units.  $d = 2 \log, r$  If we change our system of units to the electromagnetic units and let  $C =$  capacity in microfarads of one conductor in respect to the neutral plane,  $d =$  interaxial distance between conductors,  $r =$  radius of wire, logs are taken to base 10, then,  $0.241, \cdot 10^{-10} = C$  per cm. of wire.  $\log r = 0.013$ .  $\cdot 10^{-10} = u$  per inen of wire.  $\log r = 38780$ .  $\cdot 10^{-10} = C$  per mile of wire.  $\log r = 0.03878$ . or  $--- = C$  per mile of wire.  $\log r$  The capacity of the circuit (consisting of two wires) for each of these respective lengths will be half the above quantities, as we may consider that there are two line-to-neutral capacities placed in series across full potential. Hence, we may consider the line as having a certain capacity per line referred to line-to-neutral voltage or as having one-half that capacity referred to line-to-line voltage. With a three-phase, three-wire system, the capacity of each wire to neutral is represented by the formula) as above given for line-to-neutral with two wires. The distance between wires is still given as  $d$ . That is, the equilateral triangle is of side  $d$ . This may be proven analytically or...
