Such grievous doubt and skepticism, as Hannah Arendt points out, are variations of nonviolent action and resistance under dictatorship. Given the appalling state of higher education at the moment--universities back home not much better--there is no longer a place for pragmatism and, least of all, prudence. And so, it is high time that I write something in a revolutionary vein in order to look myself in the mirror. To remain silent any longer would be tantamount to the same intellectual and moral spinelessness that has given us this deeply troubling state of affairs, teachers and students alike the conscious and/or unconscious victims of what is fast becoming, if not already, a gargantuan intellectual fraud. Had I known that the academy abroad was so troubled and, indeed, tantamount to a vow of poverty...
